Industrial Uses Of Radio Found

You Can Nail It, Weld It, or Cook by It; Shots of Heat Do Trick.

PRINCETON, N. J.—Radio nails, which are needle-shaped shots of radio power that substitute for real nails and staples to pin together stacked sheets of plywood, were demonstrated at the new RCA laboratory here recently.

With consent of the war department, the laboratory was opened to the press for the first time since it began operations last September. The showing was confined to new industrial uses of radio.

The radio nails were one of numerous discoveries in a new field called radio power. Actually this power is intense heat, generated by high frequency, or short wave radio.

Radio nailing is a time and expense saver in assembly of plywood for both military and industrial uses. Plywood is made of thin sheets of wood, coated with plastic glue, which binds them permanently under heat and pressure.

Heat Produces Nails.

During assembly, pre-formed plywood sheets have to be stacked like cards. This requires pinning them together to prevent slipping out of line. Pinning has been done usually by running staples or nails through pre-formed holes in the wooden sheets. After the plywood has been pressed into final form, staples must be removed and holes filled.

The radio nail requires no holes. The intense heat almost instantly heats the glue in the narrow path of the beam to several hundred degrees Fahrenheit. This produces spots of glue between the sheets that hold like pins.

The radio nailer is a small, flat barreled pistol. The operator presses its point against the top layer of wood wherever he wants a nail. The pistol has a trigger, and when he pulls it a measured shot of radio power drives through the wood to the bottom of the stack.

In final forming of plywood the heating by usual methods frequently takes many hours. Radio power now does this in a few minutes.

Heat Is Uniform.

The radio heat forms inside the wood. The unique fact is that this heat is uniform everywhere and simultaneous. Similar heating is done to any material which is not a good conductor of electricity.

Food is usually such a material. Many experiments in radio cooking are under way here. Marshmallows toast in three seconds. Almost any food can be cooked by radio much faster than on or in a stove.

But the scientists here believe the public is not going to care much for radio cooked food. For the radio only boils the food. The boiling comes from the internal water and juices. Boiling alone fails to bring out many desired flavors. The marshmallows, for example, taste flat, because they don't brown.

For metals, which conduct electricity, radio power works equal miracles, but on an entirely different heating principle. The radio current flows only over the surface and not through the metal. But it can be controlled in split seconds and in intensities that place the heat to any hundredths of an inch depth desired, or all the way down through the metal.

U. S. Sailors Spending Lavishly for War Bonds

WASHINGTON.—In sharp contrast to their legendary spending ways, American sailors are buying approximately $6,500,000 worth of war bonds a month.

Henry Morgenthau Jr., secretary of the treasury, said the number of war-bond purchasers among officers and men of the fleet jumped more than 500 per cent during the last three months—from 50,000 on March 31 to 277,000 on July 7. Of that number 120,000 are buying at least one bond a month. In addition there are 35,000 active bond-buying accounts in the marine corps and 25,000 in the coast guard.

Races Lead War Trials In Commuter Interest

AUCKLAND. — A newspaper opened at the racing page was evidence against an Auckland man charged with using his premises as a gambling house. This was alleged before Justice Callan in the New Zealand supreme court. Justice Callan said that he often watched, when on streetcars, what men and women did on opening a newspaper. "I found that they turned first to the racing news," he said, "and when they thoroughly absorbed that they would glance at the dear old war, just to see if it was getting on all right."

It Is the Thought That Really Counts

ARKANSAS CITY, KAN.—Lieut. Jesse Stewart still has a Christmas present following him around the country.

He spent his leave at home here, after sea duty, and barely got out of Arkansas City again before his mother received the package she had sent him as a Christmas present last October.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Here to Learn: In this country are a number of young men who are being supported by governments of foreign nations. They are not enemy agents or saboteurs, however. They are here to study our customs, arts and sciences; our mechanical and agricultural development, our industrial planning. Their homelands pay their expenses in our schools. But the budgets of the countries are written in red ink. Hence, their allotments are so small that in order to live, they must resort to various occupations to supplement their income. They do not complain since they are working toward a definite end. When final surrender comes, they will return to lands devastated by war, lands where much of the manpower that filled the earth and ran the machines has been lost on battlefields. And it is their purpose, through knowledge acquired in America, to again make wheels turn.

Deception: When the Lewisohn stadium recently presented the opera, "Traviata," Alexander Sved, Metropolitan opera baritone, sang the role of the hero's father. In a hurry to make the performance on time, he applied his makeup before-hand in his apartment at the Hotel Dorset. En route to the stadium in the full grease paint of the bearded, elegant and distinguished gentleman for which the part calls, Sved, who is definitely in the prime of life, was stopped by two small boys.

"Are you an actor?" asked one of the lads.

"Well, not exactly," the opera singer replied.

"See, I told you!" cried the other little boy. "He's just an old guy who wears makeup to make him look younger."

Comeback: According to several Broadway restaurant men who daily feed thousands, the sandwich and coffee noon luncheon so popular in recent years, is definitely on the way out. Once more, it's heavy mid-day meals with a demand for luncheons of from four to six courses which of course means everything from soup to dessert. The reason for the waning of the light lunch wave is said to be increased pressure of work-a-day duties, due to war conditions, plus promotional campaigns to impress the public with the importance of energy-giving meals and health-furthering balanced diets. Nevertheless, so far as this reporter has observed, there doesn't seem to be any slackening in the business of those places where only snacks are served and where many patrons stand while eating.

City Scene: "This incident seems lifted out of a musty chapter of Dickens," writes one of this department's most alert sentinels, "but it actually happened to me. The other night Johnny Long and I left Armando's rather late and it was about 5 a. m. when we strolled along Madison avenue. Suddenly, out of the shadows of West 54th street came a bearded, patriarchal old man wearing an Inverness cape.

"'Pardon this intrusion, gentlemen,' he said in a clipped-accent voice, 'but can you spare me a tuppence?'

"We were so astounded that we gave him some change and before we could recover our composure, his odd figure evanesced into the darkness."

Meanderings and Meditations: A comely young woman looking up at the tower of the Empire State building and in an unmistakable Texas drawl remarking, "And I thought the Amicable building back home in Waco was a real skyscraper."

Her companion, a handsome, tall lad in the uniform of a navy lieutenant, nodding assent and declaring, "But New York is so crowded, the only way they can build is up" and I'm sure he's from the Lone Star state, too . . . A beetle-browed taxi driver growling, "Aw, I ain't got change for a buck" . . . and a moussey little man replying meekly, "Oh, that's all right," though the meter charge is only 45 cents . . . A gamin, clad merely in shirt and ragged overalls, walking behind and imitating the strut of a young dandy who looks as if he had just stepped out of the show window.

End Piece: Phillips H. Lord tells of the gentleman who slipped on a subway stairway and started to slide to the bottom. Half way down, he collided with a lady, knocked her over and the two continued their way to the lower landing. After they had reached the bottom, the lady, still dazed, continued to sit on the man's chest. Looking at her, he finally said politely, "Madam, this is as far as I go."

New Goggles to Trace Bullets in Daylight

SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS. — Manufacture of military goggles with red plastic lenses to aid gunners in following the paths of tracer bullets to enemy targets in broad daylight was announced by the American Optical company.

The goggles help gunners to estimate how close the bullets come to the targets and also aid in adapting pilots' eyes to darkness, the company said.

Only War Horses to Get Feed Ration in Britain

LONDON — Only "war work" horses will receive feed rations this summer, the ministry of food announced.

Oats are among the feeds on the rationed list, but not hay and straw. No provision was made for race horses, but it was expected that the current arrangement will continue under which those are allowed rations from county war agriculture executive committees under thoroughbred classes of "race horses in training, stallions and mares with foals."

'Week-End Fever' Found In Check of Automobiles

NEW YORK.—A new wartime "illness," known as "week-end fever," was described by the Office of Price Administration.

Henry N. Rapaport, chief OPA district rationing officer, said that drivers of nearly half of 10,000 automobiles stopped last week-end produced doctor's certificates stating their driving was for health.

"From a medical point of view it seems to be largely a case of week-end fever," Rapaport said.

A Bald Statement

BOSTON.—The motor vehicle registry will allow driving license applicants to describe themselves as "bald" in the future. Previously, the applicant had to describe the color of his hair whether or not he had any.

Question and Answers About Ration Book 4

Q. When will War Ration Book No. 4 be issued?

A. In this county, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, October 25, 26 and 27, between 2 and 5 P. M.

Q. Where will they be distributed?

A. At Appomattox, Pamplin and Carver high schools, and Evergreen, Vera, Oakville, Stonewall and Spout Spring schools.

Q. Will Book 4 be mailed?

A. No. It will be delivered to you at the school.

Q. Who will handle the registrations?

School teachers and other volunteers, in cooperation with the local OPA ration board.

Q. Who is eligible for Book 4?

A. All persons are eligible for one copy of Book 4 except members of the armed forces, or those persons who are confined to an institution.

Q. If I have previously received more than one copy of Book 3 for each member of my family, what shall I do with the excess copies?

A. They should be turned into your local ration board immediately or to the teacher when you apply for Book 4.

Q. Suppose a holder of Book 3 has entered military service?

A. His book should be surrendered too, as well as books issued to persons not now living.

Q. Must I apply in person?

A. One adult member of a family can register, in person, for new books for every member of that family. Individuals living alone or in boarding houses must apply in person.

Q. How do I show I am eligible for Book 4?

A. Be sure to bring copies of Book 3 with you. If you are applying for other members of your family, bring their copies of Book 3, too.

Q. Suppose I do not have Book 3?

A. You should apply for it immediately at your local ration board office.

Q. Must I declare my stocks of rationed foods?

A. No.

Q. Will any coupons be removed from Book 4 before it is delivered to me?

A. No.

Q. How long will Book 4 last?

A. About two years. It contains 8 pages with a total of 384 stamps.

Q. I understand that there are 12 stamps marked "coffee." Does that mean that coffee is likely to be rationed again?

A. It is highly unlikely.

Q. When will I start using the stamps in Book 4?

A. On November 1 the green stamps A, B, and C in Book 4 will be valid to buy rationed canned fruits and vegetables.
